

Which companies in Eastern Europe supply optical cables directly to manufacturers

AI Overview

Several Eastern European companies supply optical cables directly to manufacturers, offering a range of fiber types and custom solutions. Key Suppliers

Europages B2B Directory Europages lists over 100 manufacturers and producers of optical fiber cables across Europe, including Eastern Europe. Companies can be contacted directly for B2B supply, making it a practical resource for sourcing optical cables from countries like Poland, Romania, Hungary, and the Czech Republic.

Prysmian Group While headquartered in Italy, Prysmian operates production facilities in Eastern Europe and supplies optical cables directly to industrial clients. They offer vertically integrated solutions from glass preforms to finished cables, including BendBright XS fibers suitable for tight installations.

Nexans Nexans has manufacturing and distribution centers in Eastern Europe. They provide optical cables compliant with European fire standards and supply directly to manufacturers and infrastructure projects, including micro-cables and submarine cables.

Hexatronic Hexatronic, with operations in several European countries, offers complete fiber optic systems and micro-cables. Their solutions are designed for fast installation and integration into manufacturing and telecom networks.

Additional Considerations

Local Manufacturers: Many Eastern European countries have smaller, specialized optical cable producers that may not appear in global rankings but are listed in B2B directories like Europages. These companies often provide custom cable assemblies, polymer optical fibers (POF), and hybrid cables tailored to industrial needs.

Direct Supply: Most of these companies offer direct supply to manufacturers, including custom orders, bul...
